

fact into
letters from
go. She was ashamed of herself to out writing she said. She and see.
have dis-
parted
you might
to be a del
practice her
great ones
stets here
that if she makes those over to other Dance over
that I will have been
rested for sitting the near it. She first was right up
I shall not go
time or about

two weeks or so.
I will try and meet you at the Dis. as I do not like to stay at Mrs. W. ^{at} again. It is 4-20 P.M. and I must ship. I could

Dear Sister Marie: - write more but this is all the paper that I can spare and she might think I was telling ^{the} ^{man} ^{is} ^{going} to write to you so that I can mail the letter on my way home, I thought that I would put in the time writing a little too. Oh! by the way, I am here at my father's for a change.

I am sitting by the dining-room window gazing out occasionally, at my new home (that is to be) out on the lot. The cement is standing all around where the posts are to go on and looks like so many good sized lobbies. The lumber is out here and it really looks like there was going to be a house soon.

I guess you didn't see the plan, did you? It is very fancy outside.
There is stained glass in the bay-window in front, and double windows in the parlor. I wanted one large, wide window in the parlor but Mr Beasley said the house is too wide for one window.

It is raining today but it has been just lovely and warm. I have been out almost every day without any wrap on. Yesterday I went to Mrs. Bond's funeral yesterday. It was a Rebeckah funeral. There were over thirty Rebeckahs there. We gave a pillow of white flowers with the three links in the center made of purple violets. Mrs. Grider was Noble Grand and had to read a service at the grave. We all wore badges of crape with silver fringe and a sprig of evergreen; when the v. g. finished here part of us all threw our evergreen in the grave. It is a nice service. Emma Reiniller is in Berkeley so I understand, is she any better? Oh, I got a letter, in